

Metrice Yvette Jones

Metrice Yvette Jones is a native of Washington, D.C. born in Northwest Washington and raised in Southeast Washington.

She was educated in the D.C. Public School and finished her senior year in private school. In the fall of 1979, she enrolled in the Washington Baptist Seminary. A year later she married Reverend Carl W. Jones on Christmas day of 1980. She continued her education at the Washington Baptist Seminary until 1983, when her son was born and she started her family.

In January 1988, Metrice enrolled at Howard University School of Divinity, where she majored in Theology. She became a Sunday School teacher and worked with her husband in his ministry. Her husband was disabled and she was his hands and legs when they attended churches where he preached.

When her husband passed on to be with Jesus, Metrice was called to preach. She attended Promised Land Baptist Church, Washington D.C. After one week at Promised Land Baptist Church, she was called to teach the Adult Sunday School class. Two years later she was certified to teach.
